Heterogeneous epitopes of the human C1 inhibitor in mouse systems: implications for the role of this inhibitor in human complement regulation. The role of the C1 inhibitor (C1-INH) in the regulation of human complement has been studied extensively over the past 15 years, with the major emphasis being on the mechanism of its regulation of the classical complement pathway. There has been limited investigation, however, of the role of C1-INH as a regulator of alternative pathway (AP) activation and of the role of C1-INH as a regulator of C2bBb, C3bBb, and C5b-9 formation. A study was undertaken to define the specific role of C1-INH in the regulation of AP activation. The human C1-INH expressed in baculovirus-infected Sf9 cells (Inhib-Bac) and in Escherichia coli (
