That is fine so long as you are able to describe your objective in your head well enough (which I am not yet). Predictive programming Very good, I will follow it up. But that is not a trait of the intelligence of humans, it is a trait of our drive to create tools that will work in the future and are applicable regardless of circumstances. I don't believe that there is a correct understanding of the world, and in the end I am agnostic because I have no trust in any one interpretation of the world. And this is a typical problem with a lot of social engineering and other types of control. There is so much that is possible with human ingenuity and creativity that people are sure to invent a lot of other ways to describe the exact same thing if the main one was not enough. I want to be clear: this is a post made in response to the neurotypical post, it's not a response to anyone else. All phrasing and brevity of the current post was made with that in mind, because I thought that it would be beneficial to anyone coming across it to be clear that the post was not a response to anyone else, and that it is not worth getting out of hand with anyone else. I do not want to make anyone lose their sleep and a lot of energy. This is a thing to be taken lightly. You are

It is a group that is supposedly made up of civilian experts, as opposed to the Joint Chiefs of Staff. It has a mission of coordinating interagency studies designed to give the US a strategic understanding of current and emerging global trends. The Strategic Studies Group would be composed of experts from across various agencies, including the State Department, the Department of Defense, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff. It is meant to complement the Defense Intelligence Agency, which primarily deals with gathering information regarding current military events. The Defense Information Systems Agency has been given jurisdiction over this new organizational entity. According to a DISA press release, the agency will “provide the administrative organization necessary to support the activities of the Strategic Studies Group and help ensure that the products and services developed by the SSG meet the requirements for the efficient delivery of national defense intelligence capabilities.” The Strategic Studies Group is headquartered at the Institute for National Strategic Studies, in the Pentagon. According to the SSG’s director, the group’s existence is a shift away from the on-the-ground “Battle Field” methods of intelligence gathering towards more holistic, strategic thinking by the US government. According to Lt. Col. Thomas Carroll, the director of the Strategic Studies Group, the group “will seek to demonstrate the long-term strategic capabilities needed to help decision-makers better understand how the United States can best implement a strategy, and to shape the policy and operational opportunities to optimize the balance of military, political, economic, and social factors in order to promote U.S. security.” The Naval War College’s Center for Military Strategy and Force Development has also weighed in on the SSG’s creation. According to Dr. Daniel Goure, who heads the Center, the fact that the Strategic Studies Group has so
