Graphics: 5/5 Audio: 5/5 (MAPS, GAMEPLAY) Game is a collection of largely well-detailed 24 maps that are designed with unique designs and a very colorful look. The game maps are open playing fields with multiple pathways for your towers to move through. In contrast to previous games, "Spec-Defense" is not a linear progression. The game introduces non-linear upgrades that will allow you to fine-tune your tower defenses to your play style. It also allows you to choose to upgrade your towers early or later based on what will increase your odds of success the most. There is also a variety of enemy towers that will move in and out of play areas on certain paths. An ideal strategy in this situation is to construct a maze that allows some of your towers to block enemy forces, and then make sure that your ranged units can counter the enemy. The game provides you with many ways to counter enemy attack, and many ways to achieve victory. Gameplay seems well balanced. Towers will often have multiple attack types (range, AoE, flanking) available for use. There are several tower types that will cover different ranges. A few are passive and can be used in almost any situation, and the rest are upgradeable. There are also smaller enemy units that are well controlled, usually requiring you to build only a single tower to stop their attack. Throughout the game, you will also have your own forces moving around on the battlefield at your discretion. Overall, the game has 24 different maps and 4 difficulty settings that should keep you busy for a long time. This game is suitable for anyone that likes keeping their fingers on the keyboard, as well as for people who just want to relax after a long day at work. There are also two difficulty settings, with the higher one being for veterans only. The game provides enough difficulty adjustments to keep new players from being severely frustrated. There is a lack of a tutorial in the game and it is pretty difficult to learn everything you need to know within the first few minutes of playing. However, it is easy to get back to basics if needed. This game is well-balanced, and each tower has a specific purpose and use. It is not difficult to learn the basics within a few minutes, but it would take some time to fully understand the game. Ease of Operation: 5/5 (GAMEPLAY) This game uses a very simple interface. You have a few characters that can be moved around. the goal

| Dota 2 Guide From 09 July 2018 Although Arena of the Planeswalker may well be the most popular Arcadian Map Pack at the moment, it's by no means the only one, with the other being World Factory. Of the two however, Sandcastle is arguably the most beautiful of the two. Headed up by designer Xeneas and artist Jacques Majol, Sandcastle is a glorious mix of junks and architecture. Case in point: the floating launchpad in the one map not only creates the awesome image of the waves rolling away and the sky fills out with the sun setting, but the design of the other three story battles creates an awesome view. But I won't talk about the story maps, that's for the Battle Theme as my theme for this review. Sandcastle brings some very elegant solutions to the program, from the scale of the Battle Theme to the inclusion of 'Daily Reflections' in the Shop, namely 'General Reflections' and 'Offensive Reflections.' The latter are promoted so that everyone can progress and immediately boost up their damage while the former are that one thing that made me lose sleep the most, 'Daily Quests.' The quest is one of the only time you'd receive a daily objective. This is quite a nice deal, in-game, I spend only 1 time slot into something for x amount of daily worth, but I highly doubt it will be more than you spend out of pocket for a dream buyout ability. The stories itself are really well written (I'm still on the translation front, so I can't score on that yet) and evoke some very nice storylines. The Sandcastle Story is mostly an easy one, except for some very tough bosses, but never gets over-weighted by the sheer amount of difficulty. As with every Story Map, however, the Quality of Life matters. Sandcastle makes sure that they have been thought out to make sure the players will have no problems doing what they need to do. For example, they have provided many side objectives to do in the world maps which are entirely optional and aid you in your goal of doing the two story quests. All of these actions are handled by your Guardian, which also carry across to the story maps as well. What's most notable in Sandcastle is the inclusion of 'Daily Reflections,' which puts it's stands right next to Seasonal Reflections in the Map Shop. Put in a simple terms, Daily Reflections consist of an ability that is set to open on
