It is time to start getting your mid-month gaming fix! What did I play this time? Woah! I played Borderlands 3 (PC) for this episode. This is an RPG that I've wanted to play for years and I finally decided to jump in. This is going to be a completely new idea in the fact that I'm going to try and play through this story without any spoilers. As someone who's pretty new to the mid-late RPG genre, I picked this up and leveled character up and got down to the action. This is the first Borderlands game I've ever played and can now see why it's well liked. This RPG is a little different from the rest, as you aren't choosing a class in this game. Your character is limited to their story progression and what they are equipped with at that time. You

- Workbench to design the objects. - Kitchen to cook the meals for you. - Bathroom to go to the toilet. - Garage to build objects. - Bedroom to sleep. - Computer to watch the scenes and the videos. - Market to buy objects and foods. - Railway (like one from your house) to move in your car or to move and deliver boxes and packages. - Power Bank (like the one you have in your car) to charge your mobile phone. - Bodyguards (like a police office) to protect you and your car. - Message and Email Center to see your emails and/or orders. - Phone Center to see your telephone number and to call for help or to tell someone about a crime that you just witnessed. The Local Police Office can protect you or help you if you report a crime that you just witnessed. Use the camera to capture the evidence. By using the green color, you can go to the garage and build the electric skateboard that was just invented. The 3D printer uses a laser to create the 3D models (that you created with the editor). While the laser is off, the screen says that "the printer has been already in use." Don't be afraid because it takes a lot of time to create a 3D object. In the first level, you can't use the 3D printer because you don't have any 3D model yet. The box in the toolkit will help you with a box (like a 1x1x2 box). The blue 3D box is used for printing, the red one is used for building objects. You can also use the orange box to see your workbench menu. As you build an object, you can send it to your mailbox, so you can find it at your mailbox. And to sleep (or get a good night sleep), you just need to go to the bedroom and go to bed. - Simulate a day and night cycle. - A sleeping system. - A bathroom. - A computer. - A workbench. - An ATM in the market. - The 3D printer. - A bodyguard, that looks like a policeman. - A local police office that works with your phone. - A garage and the local car. - The railway

Requires Caution About Climate and Economics This is part 1 in a series on Steve Goreham's More Than Just Climate Change. Grab the Kindle version of the book here. In the first chapter of More Than Just Climate Change, Goreham lays out a provocative argument based on my work about how long-term peak oil. He concludes that, as long-term peak oil looms, all of the certainties of the past 20 years of climate change activism—even the growth imperative of “just cause”—are becoming obsolete. He argues that staying on the fossil fuel path means ecological and economic apocalypse. Goreham's argument is convincing. He lays out an argument against the economic growth imperative of modern environmentalism that is much more blunt and challenging than most I have heard. It does not deny that there are vast benefits to be gained from wealthy nations from cheap access to fossil fuels. Nor does it deny that climate change will bring suffering and harm to many present and future generations who rely on fossil fuels. Nonetheless, my position is that peak oil should not be considered a stumbling block to economic growth, and that it is deeply inconsistent to advocate for strict reductions of emissions of Co2 while continuing to depend on fossil fuels. This inconsistency is particularly acute in the world's developing nations, where there is a positive correlation between fossil energy use and economic growth. This is not a claim I make lightly. It is a conclusion which logically follows from the nature of present realities. It is also a conclusion that is validated by numbers. Goreham makes the point that, as an advocate of “clean-technology,” I have a formal, institutionalized financial interest in promoting the continual expansion of fossil fuels. First, peak oil-related challenges to the growth imperative of modern environmentalism are so great that they radically alter the baseline that environmental scholars use to discuss contemporary energy and environmental issues. Unless the term "fossil fuel" is replaced with "coal," "oil," "gasoline," "natural gas," or "diesel," I am less confident that there is a clear and solid understanding of the context of energy use (as a percentage of GDP in the U.S., as a percentage of the world economy, and as a percentage of global energy use). In order to have a clear understanding of current real-world energy flows, it
