Description of the Related Art Conventionally, a development apparatus that develops electrostatic latent images with a two-component developer has been widely used. The developing apparatus, when using a developer cartridge, causes a toner to be used up in a toner cartridge by rotation, and performs a maintenance operation using toner in a case that toner in the toner cartridge is run out. Also, the developing apparatus requires a configuration for driving a developing member, such as a photoconductive drum, for performing development using the developer. Japanese Unexamined Patent Application Publication No. H08-164096 discloses a development apparatus that performs development using a developer cartridge with a maintenance portion at a position away from a developing portion, which performs development using a developer provided in the developer cartridge. Specifically, the maintenance portion is provided so as to rotate, and a brush is provided as a cleaning member inside the maintenance portion. In this configuration, because the maintenance portion is provided so as to rotate, it is possible to avoid the drawbacks that the developing member is abraded by a developer and components of the developing member are worn out. However, in the configuration disclosed in Japanese Unexamined Patent Application Publication No. H08-164096, the cleaning member is always in contact with the inside wall of the maintenance portion. Therefore, when the developer is moved to the outside of the maintenance portion, the component of the developer such as toner, paper dust, and the like may be adhered to the inside wall of the maintenance portion through the cleaning member.The High Frequency of Unexpected Myocardial Injury on Cardiac Magnetic Resonance Imaging in Patients With Unstable Angina and Non-ST-Elevation Acute Coronary Syndrome.
