Epilepsy usually refers to recurrent seizures and may be classified according to its etiology. Genes, hormones, liver function, infections, structural brain lesions, head injuries, tumors, metabolic diseases, complications of pregnancy, and drugs are some of the causes of epilepsy. [5] Ongoing seizures are called symptomatic, and seizures that recur without attributable causes are called idiopathic. A progressive reduction in responsiveness in the context of ongoing seizures indicates the development of epilepsy. The progression of seizures from a few minutes to more than one hour is called absence seizures; these are usually the first type of epilepsy to appear in infants. [6] Epilepsy is usually a lifelong disease, and the chances of getting a seizure increase with age. Women tend to be diagnosed with epilepsy at a younger age than men, and when they do get epilepsy, they tend to have more frequent seizures, more seizures a month, and a higher rate of prolonged seizures. Genetic epilepsy syndromes, brain tumors, brain vascular disease, and brain injury from trauma, infection, and stroke account for 70% of cases of epilepsy. [9] Data collection for this study began in April 2007 and concluded in January 2008. Specific activities included a critical review of the extant literature on the prevalence of post-traumatic stress disorder, major depression, and traumatic brain injury and their short- and long-term consequences; a population-based survey of servicemembers and veterans who served in Afghanistan or Iraq to assess health status and symptoms, as well as utilization of and barriers to care; a review of existing programs to treat servicemembers and veterans with the three conditions; focus groups with military servicemembers and their spouses; and the development of a microsimulation model to forecast the economic costs of these conditions over time.

With the pandemic, a healthy immune system is essential. Emerging research is showing that low vitamin D levels may increase the risk of dying from COVID-19. In a pre-print cohort study (pre-print means it is not yet peer-reviewed) from Indonesia, researchers looked at the influence of age, sex, pre-existing conditions, and vitamin D levels on outcomes in 780 patients with COVID-19. The majority of deaths were among older males with pre-existing conditions and who had below-normal vitamin D levels. The researchers concluded that when controlled for age, sex, and comorbidity, vitamin D level is strongly associated with the risk of mortality from COVID-19. Although female and male brains may have similar structures, some research indicates that, on average, women are more empathetic and intuitive than men, and men are more logical and analytical. And although women and men are both creative, their brain pathways are more dissimilar when it comes to creative thinking than they are for analytical thinking. That, researchers say, may explain the gender disparity in jobs such as writing and artistry. In The Science of Pleasure, a new book by a pioneering neuroscientist studying the effects of such thinking on health, women and men learn to enhance their already-natural creativity. Despite all the attention lavished on the frontal lobes, the cerebellum, and the right hemisphere, the left hemisphere is the real brain, says Emma Whitelaw, PhD. Understanding this hemisphere is crucial to understanding how the brain works. A new study from researchers at the University of Virginia reveals that the parts of the brain that control learning are less mature in girls and in boys than those that control higher-level cognitive functions. And the development of these regions may be responsible for their differing behaviors. The study also found that higher IQ is related to accelerated maturation of brain development. 5ec8ef588b
