A workaround to this issue is to use the tool Veeam Backup Enterprise Manager v10 with the latest Windows Operating System. Veeam Agent for Windows Server 2013R2 is not compatible with Windows Server 2016, so please use Veeam Backup Enterprise Manager 10 instead. @noah, without seeing the environment and more details, it's not possible to say if your backup jobs were executed correctly. The backup job fails to execute, not because the backup job is corrupt, the job succeeded and it was completed successfully, it failed to complete because it failed to execute the backup. As such, the log files from the job would indicate the failure and the logs indicate that the backup job completed successfully. @noah, what version of Veeam Backup & Replication are you using? Are you able to run a JobHistory.log file for the job in question? This will tell us the reason the job failed and will give us the information we need to resolve it. I can confirm that a Hosted Management License is required to set up or restore Veeam environment. The requirement of a Hosted Management license (with Backup & Replication Services) can be found on the Veeam website and on the installer. Hi @v-guardian and welcome to ServerFault. Now, your screenshot states the environment is on a Mac OS X server, which means the server is a Mac OS X server. You have already seen this and found out how to do it, but it is not supported by the official docs. In case you don't need to set up a Mac OS X server, you can contact our community support team and they will direct you to the documentation for your environment. @noah, the backup is very large in size, so I would suggest to convert it to a archive and check if you are able to open it in
